

Started on	Monday, 19 August 2024, 9:15 PM
State	Finished
Completed on	Saturday, 31 August 2024, 7:10 PM
Time taken	11 days 21 hours
Grade	5.00 out of 95.00 (5.26%)

Question 1

Correct

Mark 1.00 out of 1.00

Question ID #10178: The factors contributing most to a lasting marriage, according to Gottman and Levenson (2000) are:

Select one:

- ☐ A. the couple's maturity level
- ☐ B. the couple's access to social support
- ☒ C. the couple's ability to resolve conflicts in their relationship ✓ Correct
- ☐ D. the couple's level of compatibility in terms of need fulfillment

The correct answer is C.

In their longitudinal research, Gottman and his colleagues investigated the factors that contribute to marital dissolution. Gottman's cascade theory of marital dissolution predicts that a couple's ability to resolve inevitable conflicts is the key to a lasting relationship.

Answer A: Communication related to conflict rather than maturity level was the focus of this research.

Answer B: Social support was not identified as a major factor in marital dissolution.

Answer D: Need fulfillment was not identified as a factor in this research. Additional information about their research is provided in the Lifespan Development chapter of the written study materials.